Dear Susan:

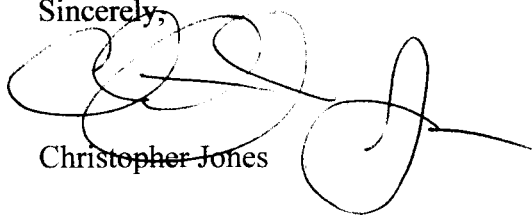

If you would, I'd like you to share this letter with all the members of the Harvard Schools Trust at your next gathering if that's convenient. I wanted to thank the Trust for the grant to purchase the two videos, Killing Me Softly and Tough Guise, which proved to be very thought provoking. The students had profound reactions to the topics of male and female imagery as portrayed in the mass media, and the connection between real life brainwashing and that seen in Fahrenheit 451 was truly salient. The videos and book complimented each other well.

In addition, all the students wrote journal entries reacting to the films, and some created propaganda posters on the topic that served as a culminating project. I've included the project sheet as well as my notes on the videos.

Again, I want to offer my heartfelt thanks; the videos made reading Fahrenheit 451 a richer experience, and more importantly the students and I tackled a very controversial topic that involves building character and values. The Trust make it possible—thank you.

Sincerely,

Christopher Jones
